Everyone can be an Influential Leader

Individuals and groups within the academic health center respond differently to change. Everyone has the opportunity to become a leader within their organization or department. They influence other group members to attain specific goals. True leaders use many leadership strategies that may include self-confidence; vision-setting; adapting to change; team-building and persistence. In this one-hour Audio Seminar, Dr. Curry will focus on aspects of particular organizational culture, climate and context and the role these features play at various levels of the organizational in terms of leading effectively (course, department, program, school, institutional levels). Particular examples and experiences will be highlighted for influential leadership at different stages of one’s career. Dr. Curry will emphasize the dynamic interplay among various features such as vision, people, resources, technology, and systems.
